Anchors Living-Learning Community

Program Overview
The Anchors Living Learning Community gives first generation college students a unique residential learning experience designed to support transition from high school to East Carolina University. Through Anchors, participants will enroll in courses designed to assist new students in being successful in their first year of college and beyond. Anchors creates a community for students through interactive academic, co-curricular, and social activities. Beginning two-weeks prior to the fall semester and continuing through the first year, Anchors residents will enjoy the typical advantages of living on campus with the added benefit of proactive, structured academic support.

Program Goals
Anchors aims to provide participating students with dedicated support in the transition from high school into a large university community. This program anchors students to campus resources and establishes positive habits that lead to success in college. With this focused start of their academic journey, Anchors students strive to be more prepared for their first year of college.

While participating in the FPNLLV, students will have the opportunity to:

- Take two academic courses beginning two weeks prior to the start of fall semester
- Take classes together during fall and spring semesters
- Grow academically, professionally, and personally through mentorship
- Live in an environment that is conducive to overall student success
- Complete personality assessments to aid in major/career exploration
- Develop an individualized student success plan
- Be actively engaged and involved on campus
- Take part in service projects
