Criminal Justice Living Learning Community

The Criminal Justice Living Learning Community (CJLLC) gives first-year and transfer criminal justice students a unique residential learning experience that connects them to Department of Criminal Justice faculty mentors, academic advisors, classroom learning, subject matter tutors, and residence life to ease the transition into the ECU community. Students involved in the CJLLC will enjoy the typical first year experience of dorm life with the added benefit of living with other criminal justice majors and additional supports to contribute to their success within, and outside, the department. In addition to discussions with faculty mentors, advisors, and guest speakers (including criminal justice practitioners), students in the CJLLC will have the opportunity to participate in a variety of engaging and relevant activities outside the University environment including career networking, team-building, and social activities.

Our goals are to give CJLLC students academic enrichment activities, additional support and resources, opportunities for networking with criminal justice professionals and exposure to criminal justice careers, and involvement in a supportive network of like-minded people so that they may become the next criminal justice leaders.
